Spring Quarter Already Here

Despite all of the disbelief sweeping the campus, spring quarter is already here. Thousands of extremely confused Stanford students have come back to campus, only to realize that their general perception of time was completely warped.

Here at the Flipside, we were a bit confused as well, so we contacted our most reliable sources to dig to the bottom of the matter. Even experts in the quarter system like fifth year senior and MCS major Jordan Hamis were baffled, saying, "Dude, I don't know. It feels like it was just fall quarter to me."

With the ramifications of spring quarter slowly sinking in around campus, many students have found themselves in a frantic state. "Wait--this means that it is almost summer, and I need to get a real, non-Meyer-library-desk job," said Samantha Pewtorn, a senior living in Jerry, who quickly broke into tears.

Several tipsters suggested that advanced physics would help us understand what had happened. However, Professor Leonard Susskind, who was not interested in speaking with us said, "Relativity and string theory have absolutely nothing to do with this. Please stop wasting my time."

After an interview with the University Registrar that devolved into a yelling argument, we have also confirmed that this is indeed not a scheduling mistake.

How To Seduce Your Professor In 5 Easy Steps

So you want to seduce your professor. Not a problem! You may have already looked to the internet for help, but the WikiHow (which exists) will bring you nothing but heartache. Luckily, I'm here to straighten things out!*

Step 1: First Contact

Send your professor an email about something plausible, like a question on a problem set. But end the email with "I'm eager for your reply, but I won't be near a computer for the next several hours/days--feel free to text me!" followed by your phone number. Congratulations, you've got your foot in the door to a world of sweet, sweet, professorial sex.

Step 2: The Sexy Text

When do you begin phase 2? That's a little out of your hands, since you have to wait for a text from your professor. But if the voodoo witch on California Ave knows what she's doing, it's just a matter of time. Play the waiting game. When they do reply, use your new direct cellphone contact to establish a rapport. The best way to do this is to "accidentally" send them a text meant for someone else, shifting the conversation away from class material. Emoticons are your best friend here! Remember, the three most important things in this game are PLAUSIBLE DENIABILITY, PLAUSIBLE DENIABILITY, PLAUSIBLE DENIABILITY. Did I send you a wink face? That should have been a smiley! Are those x's and o's hugs and kisses or does my phone automatically add them?

Step 3: Find a common interest! (Hint: The subject of your class)

Step 4: Meet for coffee!

If all else fails, you can use a paper or problem set as pretext for your meeting. Say something like, "Gee, professor! I'm having a lot of trouble on this problem set. Can we meet for coffee sometime to go over it?" But say it slow and sexy.

Step 5: Seal the Deal

Once he/she's imbibed the libation of everlasting love** that you put in their coffee (thanks again to Madame LaToothie on California Ave), your professor will be all yours!

Tech Review: The New iPad is Perfect for Taking Pictures of My Junk

Hi all, tech guru Ken Waterman here, and I'm here to talk to you about Apple's latest offering in their wildly popular iPad line, simply called "The New iPad." While the new iPad is not without its flaws, some of which we'll delve into later in the review, I can confidently say that for overall quality and ease of use there is not a better tablet on the market right now for taking pictures of my junk.

It all starts with the new iPad's high-resolution Retina Display which Apple is promoting heavily as one of its main selling points. Pictures of my junk look absolutely gorgeous on the screen; the images are sharp and clear, and you'd be hard-pressed to even see a pixel unless you hold your face right next to the screen, which admittedly I do when looking at pictures of my junk.

Also a new feature of the latest iPad is 4G LTE connectivity, which is perfect for allowing me to upload pictures of my junk to the internet at blazing fast speeds. And with iOS5's Twitter integration, I can effortlessly and seamlessly tweet my junk. We've had reports in the past of LTE negatively impacting the battery life of other devices, but fortunately here that is not the case; Apple promises the same whopping 10-hours of battery life that was present on the original iPad and iPad2. This is absolutely imperative for me, as I enjoy covertly taking pictures of my no-no parts in public places, and absolutely need the mobility that a long battery life offers.

As mentioned, there were definitely some areas where I would love to see some improvement from the iPad 2 and didn't get much. Ironically for a machine that seems pretty much designed for taking pictures of my junk, I would have liked better quality from the actual pictures themselves. Because there were no upgrades to the front-facing camera, I'm left using the 5 mega-pixel rear-facing iSight camera, which often necessitates awkwardly flipping the iPad upside down and straddling it to get high quality junk pictures. And while the rear-facing camera is a big step up from the previous model's laughable 2mp one, it still leaves much to be desired. For one thing, there's no LED flash, so when I need to take pictures of my genitals in poorly-lit areas (as is often the case), the pictures tend to come out grainy and underexposed.

These are generally minor complaints, however, and with its high overall quality and reasonable starting price of $499 for a wifi-only version, I highly recommend the new iPad as the perfect device for anyone looking to take lots and lots of pictures of their junk.

NUMBERS

The amount of money you will get after sharing that guy's photo of his winning lottery ticket. But it's likely this number will fall to $0.00 when the guy realizes it would take way too much time to send out 43 million personal checks. He was considering using the rest of the lottery money to hire personal assistants to write those checks, but after consulting with his family, this was also deemed unreasonable. Sorry guys.
