Facebook Introduces 'Like Like' Button For Awkward Teens

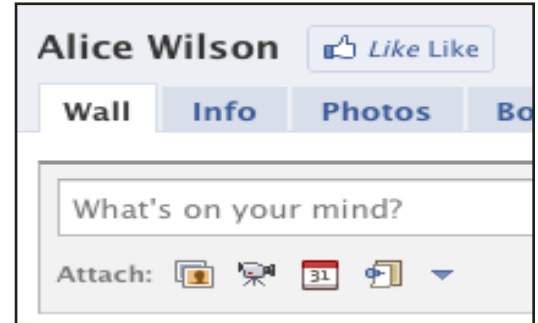

Just weeks after announcing its ambitious plan to spread the 'Like' button all over the Internet, Facebook unveiled the 'Like Like' button. The new button, which will appear below a user's profile picture, will provide a convenient way for shy or socially awkward users to share their romantic feelings with one another.

As a Facebook representative explained in a press conference yesterday afternoon, "Based on extensive market research, we realized that when you like like someone, the 'Like' button is simply not enough. With the 'Like Like' button, you can tell that special Facebook friend that you want to be more than just friends."

Many Facebook users have reacted positively to the announcement. For example, Jason Parsons, a sixth grader from Michigan, expressed excitement about trying out the new button. He explained, "There's this girl that I really like, but I'm too scared to actually talk to her. A few weeks ago, I decided I would show her how I feel by pressing 'Like' on all of her 837 tagged photos on Facebook. The 'Like Like' button just makes it so much easier!"

According to a Facebook insider, the company plans to introduce even more romantic buttons in the near future, including a 'Love' button for people who want to say "I love you" to their significant other but are too scared to do so in person. (Kuenzel)

Stanford Daily Caught in Printing Scandal

STANFORD, CA—Last Wednesday, scandal erupted at The Stanford Daily when Judicial Affairs officers stormed the building and discovered the newspaper's dirty secret.

After a Daily article published that morning brought attention to students' cancellation of print jobs to save money, University officials looked into the SUIDs of offenders and found that an astonishing number of cancellations were made by members of the Daily staff.

"Each member of the Daily staff made 10,000 cancellations this week," commented a nameless University technician. "We just had to investigate."

In the early morning, one of the administration's well-trained spies snuck into the Daily office and took video footage of the newspaper's staff printing the University's most prominent publication on University printers, and then cancelling the print job without paying the 10 cents per page. Soon after, the footage was shown to the administration, and Judicial Affairs officers were breaking down the door of the Lorry I. Lokey building.

Upon entry, the Stanford police apprehended 20 staff writers, all caught red-handed hitting cancel buttons. The police also confiscated 24 illegal printers, 16 fake SUIDs, 300 rolls of counterfeit dimes and close to 50 pounds of Dailies whose print jobs were not paid for.

"It was a brilliant plan, and it was saving us so much money," said Kamil Dada, the Editor in Chief of The Daily. "We were living the high life. We had Chipotle catered to every meeting. We thought publishing this anti-cancellation article and quoting some random student to give it a grassroots feel would divert attention away from our violations. I can't believe it backfired." ## Opinion: On Closing the Gap

On Thursday, April 29, professors, students and alumni from Stanford came together in the Tresidder Oak Room for a panel discussion called "Closing the Gap."

I am outraged. The Gap has such great clothes at reasonable prices. Right now, for a limited time only, men's and women's shorts are 30 percent off. And have you seen their new gray chambray military shirt? It looks great with just about anything.

How could we, as Stanford University students, let this happen? It is our responsibility to stand for what's right, to give justice to the weak and the fatherless, to maintain the rights of the poor and oppressed. You should all be ashamed of yourselves. (Kravitz)
