RES ED UNVEILS ENTREPRENEURSHIP-FREE DORM

This past week, Stanford dean of Residential Education Deborah Golder announced that, starting next fall, Naranja will be the testing grounds for a new entrepreneurship-free housing option.

“We’ve heard the feedback from students around campus, and we know that there are those who just aren’t comfortable with the amount of entrepreneurship that seems to occur in almost every dorm,” said Golder.

Plans are still in the initial stages, but so far the guidelines prohibit sticky notes, rapid prototyping, the dorm mailing list, words ending in “ly,” and swivel chairs.

There will be no sticky notes in Naranja next year.

Golder is still worried: “This may not be enough, and since this is the first time we are doing it, we have lots of questions to answer. What do we do if the RA walks in on a student ideating?”

We spoke to several students who echoed the need for this type of housing. “My roommate last year was a little too into entrepreneurship,” said Cole Grinly ’13. “He kept asking me to invest; first a dollar here, and then more each weekend. One day he was sent to StartX, and he never came back.”

“We want to create a safe space where students can live without white boards, beta testing, and constant iteration,” said Golder. “Think of it as an AirBnB for fuzziacs.” (Kceshin)

How To Spot a Sorority Girl

Here at the Flipside, we pride ourselves on knowing the ins and outs of sorority life. If you’ve been walking around campus and going to class wondering if some girl is in a sorority, we have come up with a comprehensive survey called “How to tell if someone is a sorority girl.” If you can answer “yes” to at least 4 of these questions about the girl, then she is definitely a sorority girl!

How to tell if someone is a sorority girl:

1. Is she wearing a sorority t-shirt? (Extra point if it’s a bro-tank)
2. Does she have that distinctive sorority smell? (perfume, apples, hairspray, tequila)
3. Is she making gangster signs with her hands?
4. Is it that time of the month?
5. Is she wearing a black Northface sweater or Uggs?
6. Is she in a sorority?
7. If you’re looking at a photograph of them, are they in the middle of the photo?
8. Is she reading Twilight at Coupa Café?
9. Is she in a sorority? (see number 6)
10. Is she wearing body paint? Or glitter everywhere? (Collision)

ASSU Election Proceeds Smoothly, Without Drama

Associated Students of Stanford University

Stanford sources are pleased to report that last week’s election proceeded unusually smoothly and without the melodrama and fuss that typically accompanies ASSU elections. “Nothing really happening here,” said ASSU Elections Commissioner Adam Adler, as he made the final move in a game of computer solitaire.

“Normally, elections are filled with over-the-top rhetoric, controversies, and candidates demanding my vote, but this year, it’s as if people didn’t even know we had an election,” said Brad Donovan ’12. “Where were the personal attacks and the dirty campaigns, the pleas for dignity, and the demand for respect? It felt like the candidates were just phoning it in.”

“Nothing really happening here”

ASSU President-Elect Robbie Zimbhoff apologized for the uneventful elections cycle. “If I could do the election over again, I would definitely make things more interesting—we could even light something on fire or cheat on our significant others.” (Adler, Foucart)

The number of students found dead after the CIA recruitment session protest last week. There appears to be almost no connection between the victims other than their mutual involvement in last week's protests. In an odd turn of events, the students all died of gunshot wounds or drone bombings. SU Alerts have circulated advising students to lock their doors at night and avoid anyone who might have access to a General Atomics M-Q1 Predator aircraft.
