Band Celebrates Arrival of New Dollies

The band on Thursday celebrated the arrival of a new set of dollies. The new dollies are expected to move more smoothly than the old and will accompany the band to all of its major performances. Band members generally look for two traits during dolly selection: a sturdy base and a strong, straight back. Both greatly improve candidates' chances.

Candidates must demonstrate their abilities on Dollie Day, when hopefuls need to show the band what they're made of. "We get dollies of all shapes and sizes on Dollie Day," said assistant manager Ditto. "Small wheels, big wheels, wide base, short base, the list goes on...But we look for the ones who move best under lots of pressure."

Also, the Band said that there will be a strict "no riding the dollies" policy to prevent wear and tear and possible injury.

When asked about the new dollies, junior tuba player Shotgun expressed his relief. "I'm just glad the process is over, and we have chosen the best ones. Carrying my tuba around was getting to be a real drag."

The band's newest dolly shows off its shiny physique.

There has been a lot of positive feedback on the new dollies. Mellophone player Shazbot said, "I'm really glad we have these new ones. They move really well and make us look really good. They also go wherever you push them without much fuss."

The Police Blogger: Computer Security and Recording Devices

By Joe Phillips, Policeman

I'm Joe, but you can call me the "Police Blogger." No, that's not what my friends call me, it's just what I call myself. This is my first blog post, so excuse the typos and ramblings.

Normally, in the paper you see the police blotter, where you read all the crimes. But I'm the police blogger—I give you the crimes and then I give you my opinions.

Let's begin: Yesterday at 3:15 p.m., a Macbook was stolen from Hewlett 200 from some girl Carli. First off, Carli, seriously? Everyone knows Stanford students are hungry for extra first generation Macbooks. Plus, the report says you didn't have a lock and are not actually sure that you lost it and that it might still be in your dorm room under your bed. I think what we have here is a case of the "I need to be more responsible"s.

Ok, next up: Last week in Mirrielees, a recording device was found in a bedroom. First off, creepy. Second, really? Ok, guys, if you are looking for recording space, I have this friend who does a really great job, he's really professional and he can record your band for cheap. He's done a bunch of local bands before—I'll give you his number.

Last: Another day, another bike crash outside the Post Office. What can I tell you guys? Helmets is the name of the game. Let's act like grown ups.

Synergy Residents Prepare for Outhouse Draw

Last week, Synergy residents participated in their annual outhouse draw, where they fought over who will get to occupy the most desirable outhouses and lavatories during the next academic year. Competition this year was fierce, with over eight residents vying for outhouse four. Synergy resident Greg Nart explained why he prefers outhouse four. "It really doesn't even need an explanation. Everyone knows outhouse four is the best. It's got the best location, the softest toilet paper and, best of all, an interesting discussion on the bathroom wall."

Though the outhouse draw went largely according to plan, the event did have a few snags. Specifically, two of the draw groups were split over the course of the draw. "There's nothing better than hanging out in the bathroom with my girlfriends—it's why I came to Synergy. Now, I'm stuck in outhouse seven with Suzie Thallows. ResEd seriously needs to reform the outhouse draw process," said Synergy resident Jenny Rempel. (Adler)
