Chefs and Potters Unions Show Strong Support for Prop. 19

Both the California chefs and potters unions declared support for Proposition 19, the statewide referendum to legalize the recreational use of marijuana in California. Famous TV Chef Emeril Lagasse, a senior member of the chefs union, commented, "Pot is the most important tool for a chef. Without it, we're nothing." Lagasse continued, "You light the pot up from underneath and then BOOM! You're cooking—that's the only way to do it."

Chef Richard Krajnyk also clarified, "There's a lot of misinformation out there. Some people refer to cooking with the pot as baking, which is preposterous. Unless you put a pot in the oven, it's not baking."

The chefs union was not the only group lobbying in favor of Proposition 19. The potters union has also been putting its support behind the proposition. Artist Blake Crowe lamented, "What would an artist like myself be without pot? I can't even start the creative process without it. In fact, I'd say that in this business, there can be no creative process without pot."

On the other side of the debate, gardeners have come out in strong opposition to Proposition 19. "These chefs and potters might get all high and mighty about the benefits of the pot, but they forget that the proposition is inclusive of weed too," remarked Rachel Garbowski, head botanist for the Menlo Park Senior Citizens Center. "How do the chefs expect us to plant healthy crops with weed flowing freely through our communities?"

Pot is crucial to an artist.

Through all this controversy, emotions ran high. A slightly angrier potter who wished to remain anonymous told a Flipside correspondent, "My job is literally on the line; these people, these vicious people against Prop. 19, they ought to get stoned." (Weinstein)

Four Loko Brewing Company Introduces New Line of Blackout™ Products

Drawing criticism recently for their caffeine-injected alcoholic beverages, nicknamed "Blackout in a Can," the Four Loko Brewing Company has taken a controversial step toward embracing its newfound status as a "problem" company.

"In an effort to keep our young, college-age audience interested, we are announcing a new line of

"It tastes like shit, but it will fuck you up"

Blackout™ products," announced CEO Jack Hammerstein. The most anticipated product is their new "Blackout in a Cone" frozen yogurt. The taste of "Blackout in a Cone" has been described as a cross between Red Bull, espresso, gin and cheap vodka.

"That's not surprising--those are the only ingredients," Hammerstein noted, adding, "It tastes like shit, but it will fuck you up."

The wisdom of the move is questioned by some experts in the industry, who expected Four Loko to lay low during a time where its drink is being banned on college campuses and is also being investigated by the FDA. But Hammerstein says he's just doing good business.

"We are really just trying to expand our demographic here," he argued, defending his company's controversial move to appeal to younger, college-age audiences. "Our internal surveys showed there was an untapped hipster community that thought of Four Loko as too 'Jersey Shore' for them. But no hipster can resist froyo."

"It's true," agreed Sunflower Grasswheat '12, a resident of Synergy. "I mean if it's froyo, it's healthy, right? Plus it just tastes so natural."

The effects of "Blackout in a Cone" are not yet fully understood, and consumers can only wait for the other releases such as "Blackout in a Breadbowl," "Blackout in a Salad Dressing" and "Blackout in a Panini," also directed toward hipsters. (O'Byrne)

Zipcar Puts Zip Ambulances Around Campus

THE ROW--Due to a recent influx of transports to the hospital on Stanford's campus, Zipcar has decided to enter the ambulance market. Starting this Wednesday, Zipcar will have Zip ambulances available to drunk students in need of an IV.

"It's a really smart idea," said freshman Sarah Lasner, who has already been to the hospital three times for alcohol-related incidents. "When I get too drunk next time, it will be way easier to just drive myself to the hospital in an ambulance. And for only $7 an hour."

Zipcar representatives explained that Zip ambulances will be available at Tresidder Union and several other locations around campus, including four permanent spots in the Kappa Sig parking lot.

To unlock a Zip ambulance, students just need to blow into a breathalyzer in the car. If the student's BAC is above safe levels, the car will be unlocked for the student to use.

Some are concerned that drunk students will be driving themselves to the hospital, but Zipcar is confident that even if the driver were drunk, the police would never pull over an ambulance. (Galant)
